THE HARPSWELL RANGE

The story of slate began 300 million years ago. Finely divided particles of silt and clay were deposited in prehistoric lake beds. These particles were compressed under tremendous pressures and temperatures during upheavals of the earth's surface, forming the material we now call slate.

Different colors of slate are determined by the color of the mud that was present at the time it was formed. We use red and green slate from Vermont and grey/black slate from Eastern Pennsylvania.

Some of the features of natural slate are the beautiful veining that can be seen in it, and the naturally occurring deposits in the stone, shown as darker, lighter, or different color spots embedded in the stone. These marks are caused when there is a mineral like iron that gets compressed when the slate is formed. This then shows up as dark spots on the smooth honed surface, as bumps in an imprint, or as irregularities in the ridges of the cleft. Because of these markings, you know each piece is unique, with its own character. These markings are a true testament to the naturalness of the stone.

Today, slate offers surprisingly versatile and contemporary applications for artisans, designers and architects.

Slate's soft, uniform composition and grain make it a workable stone. It is an extremely stable material with many uses.

The urns are made from three hundred million year old slate and are etched with graceful symbols which are precisely filled with lustrous gilt and then sealed for an enduring finish.

CREMATION OR BURIAL

The decision on whether to have a burial or cremation service generally rests with the family. Often people have expressed a personal wish by recording it in their will, leaving instructions with a funeral director or telling a family member. The choice is very much a personal one, with several things people may consider.

Sometimes there is a family tradition, perhaps a cemetery where the family have been buried, or a wish to be buried with their spouse. Sometimes there are religious or ethnic considerations.

Cremation affords the opportunity for other wishes to be carried out. We have worked with hundreds of families in their decision of either cremation or burial. We are here to help in every area of the funeral arrangements, including this important decision.

CREMATION FACTS

The company has shares in the Nelson region's only privately owned crematorium. This offers you more flexible service options compared to other crematoriums in the region.

What do I do with the ashes after cremation?

Ashes may be interred in a cemetery, scattered in a favourite place, or there may be a wish for them to be repatriated overseas for burial in their homeland. We are always willing to meet with you to discuss the many options available and assist in recording your wishes so that they be known to the family.

How long do I keep the ashes for?

There is no stipulated time in which to keep ashes, so you are not forced into any specific decision of time. Ashes are generally available the next day after the funeral, and choices about what to do with them can be made then.

Often, for a lot of people, burying or scattering ashes add finality to the funeral process, that helps with recovery from grief. Many people also like to scatter or bury the ashes at a specific time of the year, during specific weather conditions, or when the family is all together. Arrangements can be made with us to keep ashes for a period of time.

THE IMPERIAL RANGE

The imperial is a very traditional, understated urn. It is made using a cold-cast method and finished with a metallic power coat for an elegant, and timeless, textured surface.

Our imperial urns are constructed with only the finest materials to withstand the test of time. Each urn features a threaded top opening for easy and secure access.

They come with the option of including a matching keepsake candle that has a special sentiment all of its own.

A polymer-bonded bronze powder is expertly cold-cast to form a beautifully textured surface for these urns and they are finished in three distinctive colours.

JOURNEY EARTH-URN

The journey biodegradable urn is perfect for ocean or deep water burial. It's engineered to float momentarily and then gracefully sink. Once submerged, the urn will break down rapidly, gently releasing the ashes into the water.

The urn includes a water-soluble plastic bag which secures the ashes when dry and dissolves quickly when wet. The urn can be opened and resealed for scattering some or all of the ashes prior to laying on the surface of the water.

Each urn is handmade using a centuries-old papermaking technique in which the bark from the mulberry tree is harvested without harming the tree. TSA approved and the perfect urn for carry on when traveling. Our biodegradable urns are constructed to clearly allow security screeners to view the contents of the urn.

Note that all water burial urns are also suitable for land burial.

JOURNEY EARTHURN $289.⁰⁰

Designed to provide families with an urn that will float momentarily on the waters surface, then sink, where they break down naturally over time. PLEASE NOTE: Natural and blue coloured earthurns are not available at this stage.

KEEPSAKE PENDANTS

Memorial jewellery, also known as cremation jewellery, keepsake jewellery or jewellery urns, is a uniquely special way to memorialise a loved one by holding a small amount of cremation ashes or other mementos such as locks of hair, wedding rings, flower petals or a special message to or from the deceased.

Each memorial jewellery pendant opens by a screw top bail or small screw. The jewellery opens to reveal a secure and discreet area inside for holding your precious keepsakes. All the designs we supply are specifically designed for this purpose. It is not uncommon for family members to divide a portion of the cremated ashes and distribute a portion of them among themselves - particularly when family members are residing overseas.

Pendant only. Chain not included.

This is an example of Keepsake Pendants we have for viewing. Please ask your funeral director if you have another piece in mind and they will help you with another choice.

Pendant only. Chain not included

Whether you choose a traditional memorial for your loved one, or a scattering of the ashes, memorial jewellery gives you the choice to keep a small memento close to your heart forever.

If you don't feel comfortable filling your memorial jewellery yourself you can ask your funeral director to do this for you. Every piece of fine memorial jewellery comes with complete instructions and accessories for filling the jewellery. These detailed instructions will guide you through the filling process. Also included is information on how to care for your memorial pendant and information on water tightness. We hope you find a very special memorial jewellery piece to remember your loved one and should you ever have any questions please feel free to contact us.

LOVE SHARING URNS

Cloisonne is an elaborate process performed in Europe and China for centuries. The shape of the urn is firstly formed out of a metal such as copper and coated with a thin coating of enamel before firing.

After firing, very fine strands of silver wire bent into shapes, are glued to the surface forming a raised pattern.

The urn is fired again to fuse the two together. A water-based paste of crushed powdered glass (enamel) is painted into the raised patterns and dried before firing again in an oven to melt it onto the metal.

Finally the surface undergoes a polishing process to present an everlasting, very beautiful appearance.

MARBLE URNS

These beautifully hand-crafted cultured marble urns can be engraved. They come in a variety of colours. Cultured marble is a precise blend of polyester resin, catalyst, fillers and pigments, thoroughly mixed and placed into open molds which are coated with a clear gelcoat. The gelcoat is especially formulated so as to produce a tough, durable, non-porous and shiny surface, very stain resistant and easy to maintain.

METAL URNS

This selection of urns are made of various metals and types of finish to give a different look. They are supplied with screw-on lids and all brass fittings are solid brass. Some of these ranges of urns can be engraved.

CERAMIC URNS

Ceramic cremation urns were the first urns ever created to hold the ashes of the ones we love.

Early man discovered that firing the clay at very high temperatures would turn it from something temporary to a sacred vessel that would last for thousands of years.

The hundreds of years of experimenting with different firing techniques and coatings (glaze) resulted in many techniques used by today's skilled artisans.

Every urn in our selection of handcrafted ceramic urns is unique. We hope you will find the urn that will be a perfect resting place for your loved one.
